Always the culprit never the victim

BRITISH people are unlikely to be a victim of racism according to Camden Council in London. It has published a 16 page full colour glossy booklet, all paid for by the long-suffering council taxpayers, called If you're a victim of racism, talk to us. The publication hardly contemplates the possibility of Britain's traditional majority population being targeted. Black, Muslim, Arab, Chinese, Albanian and Somali people are all catered for in the booklet and even the French and Spanish get their own page for telephone helplines and services should they become a victim of racism.

MESSAGE: The council's advice to minorities is 'beware of the British'

There's little doubt that in the blinkered, politically-correct world of those running Camden Council it's the British people that are responsible for racism so they couldn't possibly be the victims.

It's Black & White

THE Commission for Racial Equality has revealed that the term 'Black' with regard the National Black Police Association does not refer to skin colour. CRE spokesman Laura Fox, said that 'Black' referred to "the common experience and determination of the people of African, Caribbean, African-American and people of Asian origin." The possibility of this new definition of 'Black' leading to a re-think on the word 'White' has been quickly scotched by the Commission. When it was proposed that a White Police Association might be set-up to promote "the common experience and determination of the people of English, Scottish, Welsh and Irish origin," - it was dismissed by a CRE spokesman as "racist".

THANKS to the diligence of a British National Party official, the countywide scandal of children in Worcestershire being served ritually slaughtered meat products in school dinners has been uncovered. Neither the children or their parents had been informed of the change which saw humanely slaughtered meat removed from menus and replaced by halal meat. A Freedom of Information request to Worcestershire County Council from Martin Roberts organiser of the local British National Party, revealed that 38 primary, 18 middle and 20 high schools in the county now serve halal meat - the type demanded by Muslims. Halal slaughter involves cutting the animal's neck, arteries and oesophagus and draining all its blood without the animal being stunned which causes the animal considerable suffering. Martin Roberts speaking on BBC

MARTIN ROBERTS: Exposed halal meat was being served in schools.

Radio Worcester said: "I was appalled to hear that pupils in our schools are being served halal meat without being informed. "Choosing to eat meat that has been humanely slaughtered is often a conscious choice, just like it is a Muslim's choice to eat halal meat, and these choices must be respected. "The way in which animals are killed for halal meat is considered barbaric by the majority of the population, but as usual our views aren't being considered by Worcestershire County Council, who only seem interested in providing for the Muslim community." Worcester MP Mike Foster, said the local community needed "a greater understanding when dealing with such issues" - in other words "put up and shut up".

Pope's quote echoes Nick Griffin's concern

THE Department of Public Prosecutions must be cursing the Pope after his remarks on Islam appeared to echo those of the British National Party chairman. In a speech to BNP members, Nick Griffin warned those present that Islam was a 'wicked and vicious' faith. These words and his chillingly correct prediction that 2nd generations Muslims living in Britain would become Britain's first suicide bombers, led to him being arrested and charged with inciting racial hatred. But now Pope Benedict XVI, in a lecture at a German University, has quoted a Byzantine emperor who characterized the Prophet Mohammed as introducing "things only evil and inhuman" to the world and spreading Islam by the sword. As if to prove him correct, Muslims responded by burning down churches and killing a nun. The Labour Government is pushing ahead with the prosecution against Nick Griffin and Mark Collett in a desperate hope that a conviction will see the two BNP officials sidelined for the May local elections, where the Labour Party faces a BNP challenge DOUBLE STANDARDS: A drunk in Carlisle, in Cumbria, was arrested and sent to prison for six months for telling Muslims queuing at a mosque to go back to Pakistan. Yet police in London stand by and do nothing as Muslim protestors tell Catholic worshippers to go to hell!

in hundreds of key seats. As head of the BNP's publicity department, Mark Collett is a key figure in the production of the Party's election material, and Nick Griffin's exhausting countrywide speaking tour in February and March is key to motivating thousands of BNP election workers. "This continued persecution of Mark and myself is a disgraceful sham with the sole purpose of trying to undermine our election effort next year. I hope everyone who can will come to Leeds on 30th October to show their opposition to this corrupt Government," Nick Griffin told Freedom. * If you can't attend, please send a donation to help with security costs for ensuring the safety of Nick and Mark as they face their ordeal to: The Secretary, P.O. 'Insane to give Muslim panel veto on terror raids' - BNP

THE Government is appointing a panel of Muslim leaders to oversee police plans on terror raids. It will assess the information that the police intend to act upon and then advise as to the consequences on community relations of any raid and whether it would be worthwhile. The panel will be asked to promise not to reveal any intelligence they are shown, but they will not have to sign the official secrets act.

SECURITY: People are worried. The idea came from the Muslim Safety Forum (MSF), which works for better police-Muslim relations. It has been under discussion since a police raid in Forest Gate. Azad Ali, chairman of the MSF, said: "The concern of Muslims was that the intelligence was flawed, the raid was on assumption and nothing else. This will allow scrutiny of intelligence." A BNP spokesman said that such a panel having a say on security matters was insane. "Police have foiled nearly a dozen terrorist plots since the tube bombings. This was done without seeking approval from a panel of Muslim leaders. "Many British people will be worried that the security of this country now appears to depend on measures being rubber-stamped by people who belong to the very same religion as those waging the war against us."

London cabbies too traditional!

A positive discrimination policy to change the make-up of London's traditionally British fleet of black cab drivers, is failing to make a quick enough impact. When London mayor Ken Livingstone, was told that less than 4% of London cabbies came from an ethnic minority, he immediately launched a campaign to get more Black and Asian people to train as black cab drivers.

BLACK CABBIES: Fine ambassadors for London in the past but now their days look numbered. Since then 12% of new licences have been granted to ethnic minority drivers, but this isn't enough for Red Ken. He told the Evening Standard: "At the current rate it will be 30 years before the trade is representative of London's diverse communities. I want the trade to reflect the capital and its population." Apart from sacking white cabbies and replacing them with Black and Asian drivers, it's unclear quite how the London mayor intends to speed up the change.

LEEDS CROWN COURT
Monday 30th October 9.00am - BE THERE!

It's just Labour and the BNP in Dudley

FORGET about the Tories, it's just Labour and the British National Party that will matter at next year's local council elections in Dudley in the West Midlands. That's according to David Sparks, the leader of the Labour opposition on Dudley Council.

SPARKS: Worried about the growing influence of the BNP in Dudley.

When he was interviewed in the Independent newspaper on September 9th over the continuing chaos in the Labour Party, he said:

"I think our chances here will be damaged if Tony Blair is still in power next May. 'We are fighting a life or death struggle against the British National Party here in Dudley and this latest episode of self indulgent politicking is beyond belief.'"

BNP high on the agenda at the Labour conference

EVEN in the midst of its leadership crisis and on the very days of keynote speeches by Tony Blair and Gordon Brown, the British National Party was still high on the agenda at the Labour Party conference.

In fact it was the Chancellor himself that first drew attention to the BNP in his all-important address on the opening day when he said:

"Let us expose and banish once and for all a doctrine of race based exclusivity that is the wholly unacceptable message of the BNP."

Just minutes later Hazel Blears, the Labour Party chairwoman, was reassuring delegates worried that the state funding of political parties would not entitle the British National Party to any funds.

"Don't worry, a threshold would apply to stop such money going to the BNP," she piously announced, probably unaware how undemocratic such a hidden agenda would sound to the public.

Twenty-four hours on and Housing Minister Ruth Kelly was outlining how a programme of forced integration in the allocation of council houses "would be an integral way of bringing communities together" which she described "as one of the great challenges faced by our next phase of government".

When it was suggested that British National Party councillors might use their influence to oppose such moves, she vowed to work with trade unions to build on a campaign already underway to challenge the British National Party, which, she warned, threatened efforts to bring communities together. "We will not rest until each and every BNP councillor has been thrown out of office".

SEVENTH YEAR: Members of the Bexley Branch of the British National Party prepare for another Poppy Appeal.

Bexley BNP raise £10,000 for Royal British Legion

THIS year, as every year for the past six years, the Bexley Branch of the British National Party will be out on their streets raising money for the Poppy Appeal of their local branch of the Royal British Legion.

Each year just a handful of Bexley BNP activists take time away from party activities and volunteer as vendors in order to raise much needed funds for a very worthwhile charity. They do it to show appreciation for those who have laid down their lives to ensure future generations living in these islands were able to enjoy a traditional British way of life, as well as to help those servicemen and women who now find themselves in need of some support.

Of course no explanation is really needed and no questions are ever asked. Along with hundreds of other BNP members up and down the country, the Bexley branch feel honoured to be able to help the Royal British Legion with its vital work.

It is essential that every BNP branch provides volunteers to raise much needed funds for the Legion. The charity faces stiff competition these days with a wealth of other organisations asking for donations from the public, and the Royal British Legion has to constantly replenish its volunteer teams as the years take their inevitable toll on their helpers. This year Bexley BNP's efforts have been recognised with an award from the local Royal British Legion branch for raising more than £10,000.

MP warned BNP poised to win in Stoke South

THE British National Party is on the verge of winning in Stoke-on-Trent South at the next General Election - that's according to constituency staff working to get the sitting Labour MP Rob Ffello, re-elected.

In a desperate effort to cling to power, the Stoke South MP has been advised to ditch his Party's open-door immigration policy and to start advocating a much harder line. Ffello told the Stoke Sentinel that immigrants in the city were undercutting local workers and that local people wanted to work but the jobs were going to migrant workers who were prepared to do the same jobs for less pay.

FLELO: Worried that the British National Party is so popular.

But his call for a rethink on immigration policy was immediately slammed by a Government spokesman who told the newspaper: "Nationals from the accession countries continue to come to the UK to work, contributing to the success of the UK economy, while making relatively few demands of our welfare system or public services."

"Migration supports a smooth operation of the labour market by filling labour gaps."

A rather deflated Mr Ffello admitted that the British National Party was profiting from the surge in immigration because of the growing resentment felt in the city.

"It's a worry that the British National Party are so popular," he said.

Why are the BNP so successful in Keighley?

ANN Cryer, the Labour MP for Keighley, has done a 'Margaret Hodge' and given the British National Party a huge credibility boost in the West Yorkshire town.

Barking MP Margaret Hodge, in the run-up to last May's local elections, announced that six-out-of-ten homes she visited in her East London constituency supported the British National Party. She was slammed by her Labour Party colleagues for providing the British National Party with the credibility boost that launched an election campaign which led to the Party winning 12 seats on polling day.

Now Ann Cryer has given the BNP another welcome boost by sending out a questionnaire asking her constituents, "Why do you think the BNP has been so successful in Keighley?" "Labour's leaflet has once again made the British National Party the hot topic of political conversation in the town," reported Keighley BNP Organiser Chris Kirby.

"I have received dozens of phone calls and people have stopped me in the street to express their amazement at this latest Labour Party campaign."

"Here we have our Member of Parliament who for the last four years has run a vicious and vitriolic campaign against the BNP and now she's asking voters what BNP policies they agree with and why they think the BNP has been so successful in Keighley."

"I shall personally be writing to Mrs Cryer to thank her for finally recognising the great strides the BNP has made within the town."

ANN CRYER: "Now tell me dear, why do you think the BNP has been so successful in Keighley?"

Life Assurance which upholds British values

THE British National Party now has a financial services company helping to fund its political campaigns.

Albion Life offers to those concerned about the growth of Islam and the influx of economic migrants from Eastern Europe, the chance to switch their life insurance to a company that supports the only political party that reflects these worries.

Many customers are also taking this opportunity to name the British National Party as a beneficiary on their life cover in order to help the only Party which is dedicated to upholding our traditional values and securing a British and Christian way of life for future generations.

The changing face of Britain

HARDLY a month goes by without Freedom's mailbag receiving a photograph of what our older readers call a 'scribble sign'.

This one was taken by Len Sandford of Huddersfield on the A59 not far from where the BNP held the RWB Family Festival in August.

Len's valid gripe is that 99% of literate British will be able to read the left-hand side of the notice but that people who understand the right-hand side, given the sign's location, will be very few indeed.

"So why does it take up half of the sign?" asks Len.

Maybe someone could quiz the Environment Agency on this.

BLAIR & McCONNELL: Changing the face of Britain without any consultation.

Immigration, immigration, immigration - Labour's agenda for Scotland

LABOUR's leader in Scotland Jack McConnell, wants Scotland to get the lion's share of migrant workers from Romania and Bulgaria when they join the European Union in 2007.

In fact he's so desperate to divert cheap labour north of the border that he spent much of September in negotiations with Home Officials, a new scheme whereby migrants will get extra points if they express a wish to go to Scotland.

Reporting to the Scottish Parliament, McConnell stressed his commitment to further immigration to Scotland and enthused over the latest wave of new immigrants who had already settled there, fuelling an increase in the population of Scotland.

This enthusiasm isn't shared by the country's doctors who warned that this influx of immigrants had placed huge pressure on GPs. They say that 46,000 new patients have registered since April 2005, putting local surgeries under unbearable strain.

With unemployment in Romania and Bulgaria running at 10% and a combined population of 30 million, experts are warning that 300,000 will seek to gain entry to Britain after January 1st.

Despite lowest native birth rate population exceeds 60 million

More overcrowded than we've ever been before

BRTAIN is more overcrowded than ever before. In August, our country's population broke the 60 million mark for the first time, recording the biggest annual rise since 1962, at the height of Afro-Asian immigration and the post-war baby boom.

But now Britain's native birth rate is its lowest ever and still falling. The record rise in population is entirely due to immigration - now running at its highest level since records began - and the higher birth rate amongst immigrants already here.

The UK, with 240 people per square kilometre, is now the fourth most densely populated country in the developed world. Only South Korea, the Netherlands, Japan and Belgium have more people per square mile than we do.

England, with 50.4 million people, is in fact the third most densely populated country on earth with 386 people packed into each square kilometre. We now have over a thousand people crammed into every square mile which is one person per 55 yard square.

Our country is more overcrowded than ever before, yet never have people been flooding into it faster - over a million in the past two years.

It's time to hang up the 'NO ENTRY' - 'BRITAIN IS FULL' signs at ports and airports before our once green and pleasant land is totally concreted over, or even sinks!

Growth warning over wages sent to Poland

SUPERMARKETS which are rushing to cash in on the disposable income of 600,000 Polish workers who have flocked to the UK over the past two years have received a stark warning from Western Union, the money transfer service.

Last month Tesco launched its Polish line of products including borsch, golabki, flaki, fasolka and 'hunting style goulash' in 11 stores following in the footsteps of Sainsbury's who started the trend last year.

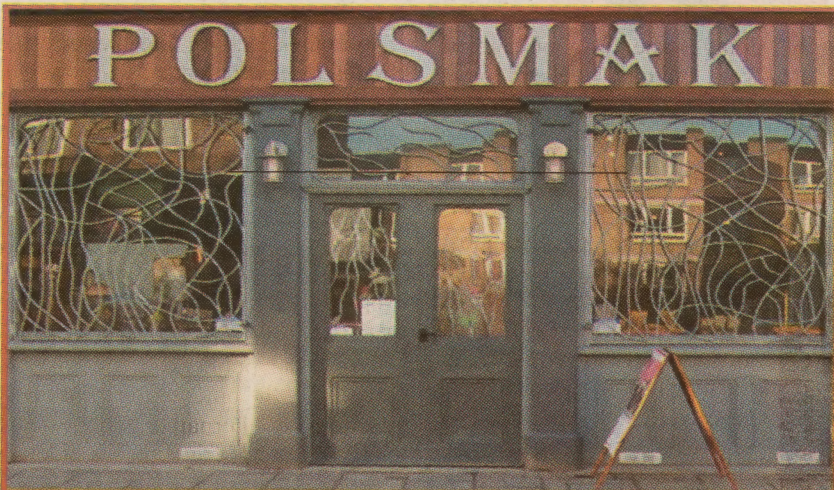

Martin Koyce, Tesco's ethnic project manager enthused:

"Britain has long been a land known for its diverse taste in cuisine... this latest venture will only add to that experience. As the Polish say: 'Jedzcie, pijcie i popuszczajcie pasa' - 'eat, drink and loosen your belt'."

The supermarkets are responding to the growing number of Polish shops on UK high streets. Banks and other financial service companies are also adapting services to meet the needs of Polish customers, and there has even been the emergence of newspapers written in Polish.

But Western Union, the money transfer service, has expressed caution in anticipating too much financial growth in this 'Polish sector'. It warned that over 60% of Polish workers still send most of their earnings back to Poland.

POLISH SHOPS: Supermarkets are responding to the growing number of Polish shops on the High Street, despite Western Union's warning.

Private landlords buy-up homes for migrant workers

OVER one hundred families in Peterborough are living in bed and breakfast and guest houses because the rapid rise in the number of migrants means there is no accommodation left for them.

Private landlords and property agencies have bought up all of Peterborough's cheaper housing stock to fill with migrant workers.

Many young families are being forced to live with parents in cramped conditions while others are living in homeless hostels. There are more than 6,000 local people on the city's housing waiting list and 70 new hopefuls are signing up every week.

Migrant workers fuel 20% rent rise

THE massive influx of Eastern European workers into Edinburgh has fuelled a housing boom which has sent the cost of renting a home soaring.

Property agents said an unprecedented rise in demand had seen the cost of renting rise by up to 20 per cent over the last year.

The increases have been seen across the whole city following the arrival of more than 20,000 workers from Poland and other Eastern European countries over the last two years.

155% house price rise

MARYPORT is one of the seaside towns in Britain with the fastest rising house prices.

According to new research by Halifax Estate Agents, the West Cumbrian town had the fifth strongest price growth in the country over the last five years.

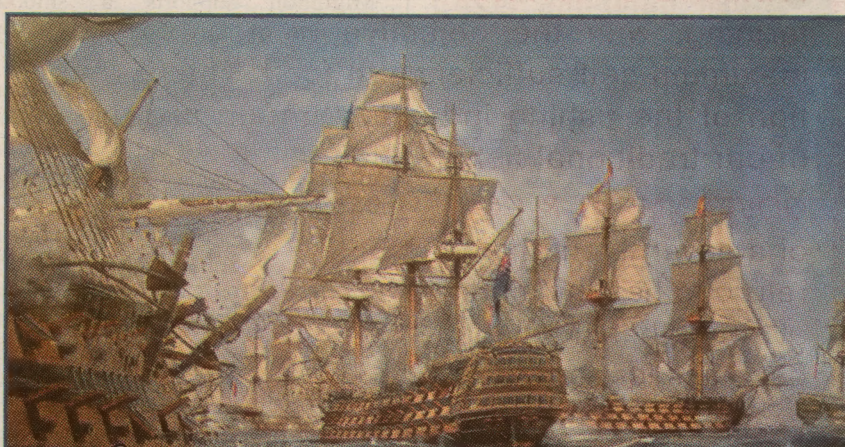

Prices have risen by 155%, with experts putting it down to speculators buying up properties to rent to the town's growing community of Polish workers.

Migrant workers fill 90% of jobs

NINE out of ten industrial jobs in Northampton are now going to Polish workers.

Recruitment agencies report a massive rise in the number of migrant workers arriving in the town over the past 12 months.

The influx has enabled employers to slash wages, forcing local workers with a mortgage to pay out of the jobs' market.

David Exley is the British National Party's Councillor of the Year

The BNP representative for Heckmonwike on Kirklees Council talks to Nick Cass

At this year's Red White & Blue Family Festival, David Exley was presented with the award for being the British National Party's councillor of the year. Here Nick Cass interviews the councillor representing Heckmonwike on Kirklees council.

Nick: Can you tell me about what problems you faced when you were first elected.

David: When I was first elected I made a promise to myself, that no matter what happened during my term of office no one would honestly be able to say I didn't give 100% effort to the job. I hope I have done this. I believe getting re-elected when the media and the other political parties said I would lose my seat, shows my constituents have acknowledged my efforts on their behalf.

a particular problem or attending a meeting I am always honest, I never make promises I can't keep and I never break a promise. If I say I'm going to do something I will do it, and if I am unable to do it I offer a full explanation as to why I can't. So I think the short answer has to be, hard work and honesty.

Nick: What is the Kirklees branch like? Do they offer you a lot of support?

David: We have got a fantastic group of people in our branch and I think it is because of this that we are where we are now. We now have 3 councillors on Kirklees council and we are hopeful of doubling that next year.

Nick: Is the council work as you expected or is there more work to do than you first thought?

David: It's nothing like I expected. The workload far exceeded all my expectations. I'm probably out most nights doing some form of council related work and on a weekend too.

Nick: What are your most notable achievements since you became a councillor in Heckmonwike.

David: One of the most frustrating things about the work I do is that I have to respect people's confidentiality and so I can't really speak too much about specific cases. However I am very proud to say that the number of success stories on behalf of people in my ward grows by the week.

Being a councillor for the British National Party certainly has a positive effect on those in authority who you go to see when you want to get things done. You can almost see them thinking... "I'd better get this sorted, I don't want the BNP on my back."

Nick: What are your plans for the future, and where do you see Kirklees BNP being in a few years time?

David: From a councillor's point of view I take every day as it comes, each day brings different challenges and hopefully I will meet those challenges head on. From the perspective of the British National Party group on Kirklees Council, my colleagues and I are working hard to build on our success and increase the number of BNP councillors representing the people of Kirklees.

We need to get more and more of our people involved at a local level so that the public can see that we aren't like the other parties and really do offer an alternative which means that we are not frightened to address problems that effect each and every one of us on a daily basis.

British National Party WHERE WE STAND

CRIME: A crack-down on crime with more 'Bobbies on the Beat'. Tougher treatment of criminals, including the return of the death penalty for child killers and terrorists. Zero tolerance for drug-dealers and violent thugs.

IMMIGRATION: An end to immigration and the scandal of bogus asylum seekers flooding Britain. Use the billions now wasted in foreign aid to fund generous 'Homeward Bound' schemes to encourage immigrants to return to their land of ethnic origin.

INDUSTRY: British ownership and control of British industry and resources, including the mass media. Protection of British jobs and industry by selective exclusion of foreign manufactured goods from the British market.

HEALTH: We will use the vast sums of money now wasted on funding our membership of the EU for the restoration of an effective national health service and proactive measures to produce a healthier population in the first place.

EUROPEAN UNION: British withdrawal from the European Union. We will trade with Europe where it benefits Britain, but want no political ties or monetary union.

EDUCATION: A return to traditional methods of education, with stronger discipline in the classroom and an end to 'trendy' teaching methods which have failed our children so badly.

ENVIRONMENT: A healthy environment for a healthy people - the protection of our countryside; a ban on greenfield-site house building except in exceptional cases of genuine local need and an end to field trials of genetically modified crops.

FARMING & FISHING: The regeneration of British farming, with the objective of achieving the maximum self-sufficiency in food. The restoration of the fishing industry through protection of our traditional fishing grounds.

GOVERNMENT & COMMUNITY: The establishment of a government that puts British interests first. A return to healthy moral values and policies aimed at strengthening the family and community. Tough penalties for corruption in public life.

FREEDOM: A massive expansion of freedom and democracy to roll back the erosion of our traditional freedoms and truly reflect the wishes of the people. The adoption of popular referenda and high technology direct democracy.

DEFENCE: An alternative defence strategy based on the principle of armed neutrality. No British blood should be shed in conflicts which do not involve British interests. The restoration of the County Regiment system and the reversal of defence cuts which have weakened our Armed Forces and cost thousands of jobs.

REMEMBER! It doesn't matter if you don't agree with us on every last thing. Like all other democratic political parties, the BNP includes some members who disagree with one or two policies. Just ask yourself whether you agree with more of our policies than those of the other parties. Most people do, which is why we are the fastest growing political party in Britain today.

Please help us all you can

The British National Party made further progress along the road to gaining more political influence within our country with a very good set of local election results on May 4th. It is vital that we build on these gains, so the campaign for next year's round of local elections must start now. Funds are desperately needed to help finance this 'push for power' - please help all you can.

CALLING TIME: Insurance giant Aviva is offshoring British jobs.

4,000 Norwich Union jobs go to India

GLOBALISATION is to cost another 4,000 jobs across Britain after insurance giant Aviva announced last month that 7,800 British jobs in its Norwich Union arm are to be offshored to India.

The announcement came at the same time as the multinational announced a 27% rise in profits to £1.7 billion. 850 jobs will go in Norwich, 450 in York, 250 each in Glasgow and Sheffield, 200 apiece in Cambridge, Newcastle, Eastleigh and Perth, 150 in both Stevenage and Bristol, a hundred in Belfast and another 100 in Worthing, and fifty in Birmingham. Many of these redundancies will be compulsory and 1000 British jobs are to be shifted to India right away. Amicus spokesman David Fleming, blustered that his union "has a zero tolerance of offshoring jobs leading to compulsory redundancies".

It is a pity it doesn't have a zero tolerance of the Labour Party it has always supported, whose globalisation policies, just as much as those of the Tories and Liberal Democrats, cause such offshoring.

If Amicus actually wants to save their members' jobs from being exported to India they have no alternative to supporting the only party which will actually stand up for the British people against the globalisation and multinational corporate greed that causes this - the British National Party.

UK airports under foreign control

MORE and more British airports are being taken over by foreign-owned companies.

In 2006, the Spanish firm Ferrovial took over the airport operator BAA (British Airports Authority), which runs seven airports in Britain - Aberdeen, Southampton, Heathrow, Edinburgh, Gatwick, Stansted and Glasgow.

As well as gaining control of Britain's busiest airport, Ferrovial also owns Belfast City and has a 50% share in Bristol Airport.

But the Spanish take over of UK airports does not end there. Belfast International, Cardiff and Luton are operated by TBI plc which was recently consumed by the expanding ACDL, owned by two Spanish companies.

Other foreign-owned airports in Britain include London City which is run by Irishman Dermot Desmond, and Glasgow Prestwick which is now under the ownership of the New Zealand-based company, Infratil.

BNP WOULD END SUGAR PROCESSOR'S MONOPOLY

Growers betrayed by 'British' Sugar and the European Union

OVER 3,000 jobs will be lost over the next 18 months due to British Sugar closing its factories in York and in Alsott in Shropshire. It's a real blow to Britain's rural economy because in addition to the 200 factory workers, 1,300 sugar beet growers and 1,500 people working for hauliers and linked industries will be left without a job.

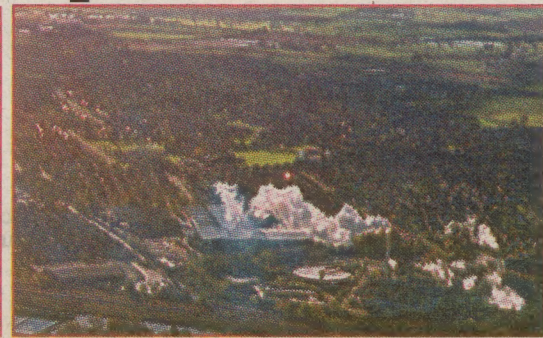

A British National Party spokesman on Agriculture attacked both the European Union and British Sugar for the devastating blow to the industry.

"The European Union wants to cut five million tonnes of sugar beet production by 2009 and British Sugar has seized on this as an opportunity to slash jobs in Britain and concentrate their operation more in Poland and China.

"The British National Party has consistently warned that our sugar beet farmers are vulnerable because a monopoly processor can dictate its own terms and has expanding interests in low cost countries in SUGAR BEET: A plant that can supply the nation's sugar without the need to import sugar cane from Africa. The York factory (right) - end of an era.

"Britain needs to get out of the European Union at the earliest opportunity. The BNP favours a set-up involving the establishment of small regional processors putting the nation's interests first and being supplied by co-operatives of sugar beet farmers."

The York sugar beet factory was opened in 1926 when the Government recognised the need for security of our food supplies and sugar beet production and refining became a booming industry.

In 1936, the British Sugar Corporation was formed, with the Government as a major shareholder, to operate the 18 factories then in production. It was a great success and by the end of the Second World War over 400,000 acres of sugar beet were being grown.

By January 2008 just four of the original 18 factories will be operational as the laughably named 'British' Sugar seeks to concentrate production overseas.

Rhondda's Burberry jobs washed away to Asia

THREE hundred more jobs are being lost to globalisation, this time in the unemployment black-spot of South Wales, with the closure of the Burberry factory in Treorchy in the Rhondda early next year.

A spokesman for the firm said the plant, which has made clothes since 1939, is "no longer commercially viable", even though in July sales were up 19%. Burberry has stated that production will be moved to a cheap labour country in either Asia or South America.

Local Labour councillor Robert Bevan, said:

"This is a bitter economic blow to the Rhondda Fawr and the county as a whole. Burberry provided well paid, quality employment and this is a sad loss to the economic infrastructure of the Rhondda".

Plaid Cymru MEP Jill Evans, observed that "Burberry is repaying its 300 Rhondda workers by scrapping their jobs".

Both true enough. But Labour and Plaid have a cheek setting themselves up as champions of the redundant workers when both Parties, just like the Tories and the Liberal Democrats, support the globalisation and free market economy that has caused their jobs to be offshored to the Third World in the first place.

Only the BNP would save their jobs by levelling the playing field through import tariffs which would wipe out the advantage of using cheap Third World labour instead of British workers to produce the goods that are sold in our shops.

Medical secretary jobs go to typists in India

LEEDS NHS: British jobs sent to India.

MEDICAL secretaries at Leeds hospitals are being maxed and their work sent to India. Around 60 specialist posts will go as the typing of treatment notes and letters is outsourced in a move to save up to £1m a year.

Medical secretaries are highly trained and if there are any queries, are on hand to check with the doctor. This won't happen if the person typing up the notes is in Asia.

Medical secretaries at St James's and Leeds General hospitals earn around £20,000 a year while typists in India earn just 44p an hour.

Medical secretary vacancies across Leeds Teaching Hospitals NHS Trust have been frozen in advance of the project and the Trust is advertising for a private firm to co-ordinate it.

The global economy in action

CHEAP Slovak labour that caused a French firm to shut down its factory near Coventry, and cheap Chinese labour allowing imported car parts to undercut British products has cost 90 alloy wheelmakers their jobs in Belfast. That's today's global market economy in action!

Car parts firm Montupet has been forced to lay off workers after losing a quarter of its total sales volume in the last two years. According to the company, "This situation is a result of primarily our loss of market share with low cost countries entering the market, for example China, and secondly our customers losing market share in the automotive market".

"The decision of Peugeot to close its assembly plant in Ryton" - itself caused by globalisation allowing them to take advantage of cheap East European labour - "which represented 25% of Montupet UK's sales volume has impacted on this situation," the company spokesman continued.

Matters are getting worse - cheap imports are expected to cause a further 25% fall in the sales price of car wheels over the next five years. Already British wheel-makers are struggling: "Despite high investment and efforts to improve our productivity we are still in a negative profit situation for wheels business" said Montupet.

The fact is British factories just can't compete with Third World labour rates and that's why Montupet is now opening a factory in Bulgaria.

Don't buy Smarties and strike a blow against offshoring British jobs

ANOTHER 650 jobs were lost in a black month for York when Nestle Rowntree announced the transfer of production of Smarties from its factory in the city, where it has been made since 1937, to Hamburg in Germany.

The company also announced it would be moving production of Black Magic, Matchmakers, Drifter, and Yorkie from the city in 2007.

Production of White Crunch is switching to San Sisto in Italy and KitKat snacksize to Sofia in Bulgaria. Aero Minis and Snacksize are being transferred to Zora in the Czech Republic.

Henry Isaac Rowntree started making sweets and chocolate in York in 1862 when he shipped in cocoa to Tanner's Moat, York, via Hull Docks.

Black Magic chocolates were introduced in 1933 and Aero just two years later.

In 1988 Rowntree was taken over by Anglo-Swiss firm Nestlé SA. Now it seems as though York's fine tradition of producing sweets and chocolates is coming to an end.

You can do something to show your disgust at the offshoring of these British jobs to Germany. Don't buy any more Smarties.

Poles making Trowbridge a 'tinder box'

THE arrival of hundreds of migrant workers from Poland is causing tension in the West Wiltshire town of Trowbridge.

Since the beginning of August large groups of young Polish men have been gathering each day in Town Park and Wicker Hill to spend the time drinking and shouting at passers-by. The problem has escalated in recent weeks leading to an emergency council meeting where the situation was described as "quite frightening" and "like tinder, only needing a spark to cause trouble."

TOWN PARK: Tranquility shattered by gatherings of Polish workers.

Taxpayers foot asylum taxi bills

ASYLUM seekers and refugees are to be ferried from London to Birmingham in taxis - with taxpayers footing the £500,000 bill. Under the controversial plan, they will be driven 120 miles in mini-cabs from Dover and London up to Birmingham and across the West Midlands, with taxi, minicab firms and coach companies able to bid for a share of the contract.

Birmingham City Council, along with the councils of Dudley, Wolverhampton and Coventry form the West Midlands Consortium which signed a £2.5 million contract with the Home Office's National Asylum Support Service to take thousands of immigrants over the next three years. The influx will put further pressure on housing with more than 2,000 asylum seekers already in Birmingham and 650 in council properties, taking homes which should be given to local people.

Labour want more Muslim women on TV

MUSLIM women wearing burqa, hijab, or headscarf, should be employed in front-line roles in the media, said a report published by Ruth Kelly, the Minister for Women.

More women wearing 'traditional' clothing needed to be seen in the public eye, particularly on television, to encourage more Muslim women to put themselves forward, it said.

Miss Kelly said the Government was giving priority to helping ethnic minority women to overcome discrimination at work and play a more prominent role in public life.

BURQAS! Now Mr Smith, what can you tell me about your new book?

AVITAL part of the report by Lord Ouseley into the Bradford Riots of five years ago was censored by the Government and not published at the time because it was regarded as too "sensitive".

But now those warnings of the consequences of Muslims living in Bradford marrying partners from Asia, have come to fruition, leaving Bradford's Pakistani and Bangladeshi communities as a breeding ground for extremists.

A recent report for the Department for Work and Pensions (DWP) found that less than half of men of working age from the ethnic minorities were in employment.

The DWP report concluded: "Male and female partners coming to Bradford from abroad for marriage means there is an increase in the inactive working population in Bradford."

In the wake of the Bradford riots, a report by Lord Ouseley warned of this impact of marriages to spouses from Southern Asia and the resulting high birth rates. He wrote:

"About 1,000 Bradfordian Muslims marry each year. If most of those marriages were internal to this country, it would lead to 500 new households which would be likely to average 4 children per household. "With 60% of marriages involving

Government censored Ouseley's early warning on overseas marriages

BRADFORD RIOT REPORT:

Consequences of the trend for Muslims in Bradford to marry a partner from overseas were deemed too controversial for public consumption.

a spouse from overseas, the number of households goes up to 800 and, with many of the spouses being first generation, family size is likely to be significantly larger. So whereas 500 internal marriages might be expected to produce 2,000 offspring, the 800 marriages are likely to produce 4,000 offspring. This leads to very rapid population growth.

"In the 1980s it was estimated that the Muslim population would reach 130,000 by 2030 and then level. Now the projection is for 130,000 by 2020 and rising. The number of separate households is predicted to rise from 16,000 now to 40,000 in 2020. "This rate of growth concentrated in particular areas puts severe demands on the public services. It has other ramifications. Many of the children arrive at school with little or no English. Many of those who come from overseas have little education and do not possess skills which are transferable to a Western economy. The high family size means overcrowding will be a persistent problem."

This early warning of the very problems facing Bradford today was deemed not fit for public consumption because it was too 'controversial' - or close to the truth - so Tony Blair and his Government deleted it from the report.

BNP proved correct over election warning in Crewe

by Ralph Ellis

DURING the local elections in May, the British National Party warned voters in Crewe in Cheshire that there was a grave price to pay for an open-door policy on immigration into the region.

The BNP pointed out that Crewe was not a boom-town desperate for new workers and the influx of economic migrants would displace local workers and lower wages.

The local newspaper attacked the BNP warning as 'racist' and during the election campaign gave prominent coverage to anyone and everyone who would denounce the Party. Now the Local Government Association (LGA) has confirmed that the BNP's predictions were correct.

Any government has a primary duty of care towards its own workers, before assisting others. New Labour is supposed to be the party of the working people, but if its local representatives took the trouble to walk around parts of Maw Green, Alexandra and Valley, they would find endemic poverty, deprivation and unemployment in Crewe.

But instead of promoting British industry and assisting unfortunate people back into productive jobs, the Labour Party's solution to their plight has been to import new workers from Eastern Europe.

New Labour is not concerned about the welfare of British workers, it is only interested in reducing wages, and enforcing new terms and conditions of employment. Labour doesn't care that those lining up in today's dole queues were once the mainstay of their traditional support.

Labour claimed that only 15,000 Eastern Europeans would come to Britain. The real number is nearly a million. This was a deliberate lie to keep any dissenters quiet.

The British National Party warned that the difference in wages and levels of employment between Britain and Poland would mean an influx of economic migrants putting British workers out of a job.

This has led to extra pressure on local services. The LGA is so worried about this that it wants councils across the country to implement a 6% 'immigration tax' for all council taxpayers to pay in order to meet the needs of the new arrivals.

This will cover the extra welfare, medical, education, policing, translation and transport infrastructure costs that a huge influx of migrants require.

The British National Party would close Britain's borders to any further immigration and return all economic migrants to the countries they came from.

The BNP would promote and assist British industry and technology, primarily by ensuring that we have a level playing field. Crewe's industry cannot be expected to compete with Poland and China where slave-labour wages are paid and there are little or no health and safety regulations.

Thankfully, New Labour - with its raft of wasteful, politically-correct local council initiatives which have failed Britain so badly has been exposed for what it is. There is only one political party which will bring lasting economic prosperity and social unity to Crewe and that is the British National Party.

Ethnic business support gets £8.1 million

A SCHEME to improve business support for ethnic minority groups in West Yorkshire has received a boost of £8.1m for new investment.

The West Yorkshire Enterprise Culture and Diversity Programme will now be able to create at least 200 businesses by providing training and advice.

A spokesman for the Department of Work & Pensions said: "We cannot waste people's talents just because they're from an ethnic minority."

The money comes despite the number of people from the black and minority ethnic community who have a job increasing by 680,000 since 1997 to 1.85 million.

Massive change in Boston

BOSTON in Lincolnshire has changed beyond recognition according to the local police chief and this is putting extra pressure on the service his office provides the public.

Chief Superintendent Russ Hardy, divisional commander for East Lincolnshire Police, told the local newspaper:

"Boston has changed significantly over the last ten years. Back then it would have been unheard of to hear Portuguese and Polish accents while walking down the street."

"The area has changed massively and so has its policing needs. We now have to employ interpreters and translators if English is not someone's first language."

There was another warning of unsustainable growth in the town from the local job centre which registered 10,318 new national insurance numbers, a tenfold increase from just two years ago.

With such an influx of economic migrants there's been extra pressure put on the town's social housing with the Citizens Advice Bureau reporting a "dramatic increase in the number of applicants registered on the Boston Housing Register."

Muslim patients get a hospital burqa

A GOWN designed for female Muslim patients who wish to preserve their modesty for religious reasons is being introduced to hospitals in Lancashire.

The £12 outfits - made in Yorkshire - cover the entire head, neck and body, leaving just a slot for the eyes.

The burqa-style gowns come with trousers, two styles of head-dress and elasticated cuffs to prevent women's arms from being revealed.

They will be available to patients at Chorley and Preston next month.

WENTWORTH HALL: Built in 1933 to serve all of the community, but now plans are afoot to knock it down and build a mosque.

BNP help residents resist mosque plan

RESIDENTS in Carshalton in Surrey have called upon the local British National Party to help them campaign against plans to build a mosque and madrassa in the area.

The approach followed on from a controversial application by the Muslim Cultural and Welfare Association of Sutton (MCWAS) to knock down Wentworth Hall in Woodstock Road and build 'a new community centre' in its place.

A BNP spokesman said that discussions took place with resident representatives and hopefully, some useful advice was proffered.

"It was explained that when seeking planning permission, Muslim groups have been told by the Government to ask for 'a community centre to be used for Islamic teaching and prayer which can be used by local residents." In reality, if permission is granted, the community centre quickly becomes a mosque and madrassa and local people don't go anywhere near it," he said.

The original application was later withdrawn by the MCWAS after residents objected to the proposal on the grounds it would create traffic chaos in the area, but now a new one has been lodged. This brought a word of warning from the BNP.

"In Clitheroe there were SEVEN applications for a mosque in the town. Applications get withdrawn if there's too much initial opposition but once things quieten down, then it is presented again in a slightly modified form.

We have urged the residents of Carshalton to remain vigilant."

The tale of the tents at the South Wales Show

SPOT THE DIFFERENCE: Interested visitors to the BNP stall (above). There's just one taker at the Tory tent and two young children in an otherwise empty Labour tent (right).

IT is easy to see why the South Wales Labour and Conservative Parties were so upset by the fact that the British National Party had a stall at the Vale of Glamorgan County Show back in August.

As the photographs show, the British National Party team were kept busy from the time their stall opened. In fact it was late afternoon before there was even time to take a tea break. Stopping for lunch was out of the question with more than 1000 visitors stopping at the BNP tent during the day. Contrast that with the Labour Party and the Conservative Party stalls. People were actually avoiding going anywhere near either of them. As they say, the camera never lies and every picture tells a story.

Record collection as Michaela briefs Coventry on Big Brother

THERE was a very good turnout of around 45 people at the Coventry & Warwickshire BNP branch meeting on Saturday 9th September.

Local organiser Chris Turner, spoke on several local issues including the need for more candidates to come forward for the next round of council elections. And he wasn't to be disappointed with four people at the meeting stepping forward and asking for their names to be added to the shortlist for next year.

The main speaker for the day was Michaela McKenzie, a good friend of the branch, and last year's North Warwickshire Candidate at the General Election.

Michaela gave an excellent speech, which dealt predominately with the big brother state that we now live in. She said that big business as well as government security departments are now able to track you everywhere and anywhere, through the latest technological devices that are on the market, from mobile phones to a supermarket loyalty card.

Her speech opened the eyes of a few of those in the audience and made for an interesting question and answer session at the end.

An unexpected bonus at the close of meeting was the announcement by Mark Badrick the branch fund-holder, that the meeting had raised a branch record of £791.06. This was excellent news as Coventry & Warwickshire BNP had bought its own printing press just a month earlier which had left a rather large dent in branch funds.

PREPARING FOR MAY 2007: Much of the meeting was spent discussing next year's local elections.

150 hear Nick Griffin speak in Stockport

by Richard Chadfield

THERE were 150 members and supporters at the September meeting of Stockport British National Party to hear a speech from BNP chairman Nick Griffin.

Nick talked for forty-five minutes comparing Tony Blair's rotten and corrupt British establishment with the failing communist rule of Mikhail Gorbachev. He pointed out that the Soviet Union started to disintegrate when its politicians and people started to question, and by implication doubt, the rigid structures of the system.

The BNP chairman likened this to increasing skepticism about Britain's multi-racial society being shown by some forward-thinking politicians and the public, and how once this process of questioning and doubt started, it could not be stopped.

There was even proof of this process of disengagement in the audience. A Stockport councillor had asked the BNP if he could attend the meeting as he is beginning to doubt the political system that he is serving.

Nick continued by cautioning the audience that although the establishment system was tottering things would get much worse before its final collapse and then no individual or class would be spared. "Being respectable and towing the system's line, even when you know it is not in our or the country's interests, will not protect you from the inevitable consequences," he told the audience.

"Middle class families with good jobs living on 'safe' estates will still find asylum seekers billeted next door as the torrent of immigrants floods the country unchecked. This has already happened in Tameside where asylum seekers have been placed in the 'sought-after' Hearts Head estate and as a result property prices have slumped by 20%.

"And your children won't be safe either as the government plans to 'bus' British school children into predominantly immigrant schools and immigrant school children into predominantly British schools. It's a strategy that is about to start in Burnley."

Nick warned that the establishment's last throw of the dice would be enforced integration and that although this strategy would pave the way for nationalism, British Nationalists still faced a difficult few years as the dying establishment lashed out ever more desperately.

The meeting concluded with Stockport member Richard Skill presenting Nick with four books by written by his friend, local historian Arthur Lane, which detailed his experiences in the Far East theatre.

Bowden in Swansea

by Rebecca West

THE British National Party's charismatic cultural officer, Jonathan Bowden was the guest speaker at a meeting of the Swansea branch of the BNP on 22nd September.

Warming up the audience before the main address were a variety of speakers covering topics such as the BNP's progress in Bridgend, the 'Red, White and Blue' family festival, the Welsh Assembly elections and the BNP stall at the recent Vale of Glamorgan County Show.

Jonathan Bowden, as is his usual custom, spoke without a script and held the audience of over fifty spellbound for an hour - so much so, you could hear a pin drop. He covered a multitude of topics in an outstanding performance and the verdict of those present was that he was one of the most interesting and entertaining speakers to take the floor in Swansea for quite some time.

JONATHAN BOWDEN:
An outstanding speech delivered without a script.

The venue which hosted the meeting was the lounge bar of a very friendly and welcoming town centre pub and was provided free of charge.

Over £300 was raised from the sale of merchandise and the collection. The funds will go towards the campaign for the Welsh Assembly elections.

MAKING AN IMPRESSION: Andy Holders and his team - the community party willing to help local people.

BNP clean-up in Loughborough

by Wayne McDermott

AFTER receiving a number of calls from worried residents about the state of the children's play area in Shelthorpe, local organiser Andy Holders, got a team together on the morning of Saturday 9th September to clean up the park and surrounding area.

As well as the usual empty beer cans, glass, wrappers etc that normally plagues areas which the Council usually misses, we found several shopping trolleys from the nearby supermarkets dumped in the park. One elderly lady came out to ask for assistance with an old carpet that had been dumped in front of her house but which the council wouldn't move it without payment. She asked us if the BNP clean-up team could help and of course we were pleased to oblige. Now another person knows that the BNP are the community party willing to help the local people. Andy told Freedom that he was shocked by the amount of broken glass on the children's play area, but was pleased with the morning's work as children began to come out and play on the park after the clean-up. "These play areas are a vital part of community life and must be maintained regularly otherwise they pose a risk to children's safety as well as being a neighbourhood eyesore." The British National Party will continue to look after the interests of the residents of Loughborough, providing former traditional Labour voters with a new party to give them fresh hope.

by Rebecca West

BRIDGEND British National Party activists were out and about every weekend during September delivering leaflets and sample copies of Freedom on Brackla - one of the largest housing estates in Europe.

They also went to the other side of town to leaflet and speak to residents of the Chelsea Avenue estate which came under the spotlight recently on the ITV Wales news programme, "Wales This Week".

It showed how first the local council and now the Valleys to Coast housing association have both allowed the estate to become run down and the homes to fall into disrepair. The blame for this lies fairly and squarely at the door of the housing association and the local council.

Bridgend BNP shows the community it cares

One resident told the BNP activists: "Crime in the area is out of control. You never ever see a bobby on the beat here and there's drug dealing going on openly in the street and nothing gets done about it. My young son found a syringe on the pavement the other day, it's as if no one cares any more". Another resident said that most of the private rental properties in the area are being taken up by Eastern Europeans and other immigrants to the area.

"There is nowhere to go once you move onto this estate. You are here for ever, there's no getting away. It's like a prison without the bars." The pressure on housing stock in Bridgend has, like most places in the country, pushed house prices well above that which the average first time buyer can hope to afford. This coupled with the shortage of well paid work, is having a serious detrimental effect on the local population.

Bridgend BNP is letting local residents know that it cares about their plight and is asking for support in voting for the British National Party in the coming elections.

If you want more of the same, keep voting the same. If you want to see change then change the way you vote.

Northants gets a taste of BNP Britain

MEMBERS and supporters coming along to Northants BNP September's meeting were treated to two guest speakers.

After an introduction from the local organiser Dave Robinson, the first speaker of the evening was Jim Wood of Beds & Bucks BNP, who outlined some of the policies of a future British National Party government and how they would be implemented.

Top of the agenda would be an end to trendy politically correct teaching methods which would be replaced by the traditional three R's, taught in orderly classrooms governed by a strict code of discipline.

Jim also attacked the scandalous waste of public money spent on promoting multi-culturalism. He gave the example of the £250,000 funding for Northamptonshire's Black history project. This provides teachers in county primary and secondary schools with compulsory 'enlightenment packs' to teach pupils of the contribution of black people to Northamptonshire's history.

"How many Northamptonshire county school pupils I wonder, know about the Battle of Northampton (10th

JIM WOOD: Children should have a good knowledge of the majority community's history first.

July 1460) during the Wars of the Roses, or indeed perhaps the most important battle on British soil, The Battle of Naseby (14th June 1645), which marked the turning point of the English civil war?" Jim asked the audience.

"How many of today's pupils know about the boot and shoe trade in Northamptonshire for which the county became famous (until most of the production was shipped overseas in the 1980's).

"Surely, today's school pupils should have a good knowledge of the majority community's history before learning about recent obscure minority historical events," he concluded.

John Ryde from Leicestershire BNP was the supporting speaker and he explained how the press (both local and national) twist the truth and fabricate stories just to portray the British National Party as extremists and put us in a negative light.

To end what was generally agreed to have been the best meeting yet, a collection was held which raised nearly £200 towards next year's local elections fund.

WELCOME: Northants BNP organiser Dave Robinson, opens the meeting.

BY THE SEASIDE: BNP members enjoy a barbecue in Brighton.

Barbecue raises £200 for Brighton & Worthing funds

THE Brighton & Worthing group of the British National Party held its first ever fundraising social last month.

There was a very good turnout, and despite a weather forecast to the contrary, the day was dry and bright. Thirty-six members and supporters tucked into a sumptuous spread of the traditional barbecue delights, various salads and sandwiches together with a large bowl of mint cous-cous which was donated by one of our members.

The gathering was entertained by Mark Stevens (of RWB 2006 fame) and his squeezebox, with a lively selection of traditional folk tunes which encouraged people to leave their chairs and burn off some calories.

A raffle was held with five prizes on offer which raised £53 towards group funds and there was also a Freedom and Identity stall with a small selection of Excalibur merchandise.

Altogether, after expenses, a very commendable £200 was raised to put towards next year's local election campaign.

Those who inspire our ideology: No.15 J.R.R. Tolkien

Resisting the rising shadow of the hordes of darkness

JOHN Ronald Reuel Tolkien (1892-1973) needs no introduction to many British Nationalists because of his heroic fantasy epic, The Lord of the Rings, which has been an inspiration to us, both in the original book trilogy and in the stirring film adaptations by Peter Jackson.

The tale of the desperate, seemingly hopeless, struggle of the Free Peoples of the West against the rising shadow of the hordes of darkness which threaten to pour over the last islands of civilization and drag the world down into slavery and destruction, is a tale for the age we are now entering.

As is the way in which Tolkien's Hobbit heroes from the Shire, a land the author explicitly "based on rural England and no other land in the world", eventually achieved a victory beyond hope because they were steadfast and true in the face of overwhelming odds.

In 1912, as an Oxford undergraduate,

GREAT WAR: Tolkien served with the Lancashire Fusiliers, in the front line at the Battle of the Somme.

he was inspired by the way in which the Kalevala, the Finnish national epic recreated from ancient folktales by Elias Lönnrot 75 years earlier, had inspired in the Finns a renewed national consciousness which was to lead to their nation regaining its long-lost independence. He lamented

"The Hobbits eventually achieved a victory beyond hope because they were steadfast and true in the face of overwhelming odds."

"I would we had more of it left - something of the same sort that belonged to the English". And from that sprang his life's purpose - to remedy that loss. To create, as he put it, "a mythology for England".

But first Tolkien was to show that he was ready to dedicate more than his mythology to his country. He was prepared to put his life on the line for our homeland. Volunteering for active service in the First World War, he served as a Second Lieutenant in the Lancashire Fusiliers, and fought in the front line at the Battle of the Somme in 1916.

There he saw the nightmare land of Mordor at first hand, and found the inspiration for one of his heroes, the brave stalwart Sam Gamgee. He later said that Sam "is a reflection of the English soldier, or the privates and batmen I knew in the 1914 war, and recognised as so far superior to myself", and took pride in "the Englishry of that jewel among the hobbits".

Returning from fighting for his country, Tolkien spent the rest of his working life as a scholar, first at Leeds then at Oxford, delving into the Anglo-Saxon roots of our national language and the myths and hero tales of our ancestors over a thousand years ago. Lord of the Rings reflects its author's deep patriotism. The Hobbits are, as he explained, "just rustic English people, made small in size because it reflects the generally small reach of their imagination - not the small reach of their courage or latent power". Overcoming the former to tap into the latter to save themselves is the challenge faced by Frodo Baggins and his friends, firstly within themselves and then, when they return from victory abroad to save their own homeland in "The Scouring of the Shire" amongst their own folk.

More than an inspiration in itself, the Lord of the Rings reflects Tolkien's wider world-view. The Shire of the Hobbits is very largely a ruralist-distributist utopian vision, and hence one for modern British Nationalists too. Tolkien was very much alive to the threat of what he called "Americo-cosmopolitanism", what we now call internationalist globalisation.

He subscribed for 20 years to Candour, the political journal of British Nationalist A.K. Chesterton, with whom he corresponded. Tolkien like those in the modern British National Party, was a Nationalist and not a 'Nazi'.

In 1941 he wrote "I have in this War a burning private grudge . . . against that ruddy little ignoramus Adolf Hitler". In Tolkien's case it was for "ruining, perverting, misapplying and making for ever accursed, that noble Northern spirit, a supreme contribution to Europe, which I have ever loved and tried to present in its true light". To which we would add besmirching the name of our noble cause with tyranny and mass murder and coming very close to bringing it and our people to ruin.

Tolkien's great life work had a purpose - to give the British a national myth to inspire in us as it has in many peoples around the world, a pride in their heritage and a determination to survive to preserve it.

Tolkien intended those who found his work applicable to them and the events around them, as we certainly do, to defend that heritage. Given his own deep patriotism, there is little doubt he would welcome us, in particular, doing so.

THE SHIRE: Tolkien's heroes in 'Lord of the Rings' were the Hobbits who lived in a land that the author explicitly based on rural England.

A reflection on the RWB

ON the Sunday morning Nick Cass was out and about in a car with a loud speaker announcing a Church service. It made me smile, a mobile minaret this was not.

I went along to hear Reverend Robert West for three reasons: first he has at great personal risk to himself brought a new aspect to the BNP; second I've grown to like him over the last twelve months; third the Christian part of me that I have neglected for so long needed re-kindling.

I wasn't disappointed. That tent was, no pun intended, a God-send.

In the congregation were Catholics, Protestants, Chapel folk and evangelicals all bound together by this totally unpretentious man who reached out to us by telling us what we already knew. That the established church leadership is out of touch with the people, so out of touch that they preach to empty pews about accommodating the very 'faith' that seeks to destroy Christianity and Western Civilisation not only in Britain but worldwide.

He spoke with knowledge and clarity about how they seek to make the abnormal, normal, and the deadly dangers of it and as I listened I thought about Ireland where so many have died over the sectarian issue. Had Ireland had a Robert West years ago how things may have been different.

Taken from Frank Brammah's report on this year's RWB Family Festival which first appeared in Identity, Sept 2006.

SALLY WOOD Straight talking!

Groundswell of opinion

WHEN Sunday Times journalist David Aaronovitch was asked on Any Questions whether he thought there should be an upper limit to immigration, his response was predictable - it wasn't necessary.

The more the merrier it seems as far as he is concerned, and also for all those making large profits out of cheap labour.

A caller to the Any Answers programme gave a much more sensible response. The lady informed Jonathan Dimbleby that taking into account Britain's resources, there should be an optimum population of no more than 30 million and that the reason we now suffer hosepipe restrictions and congestion charges is because our population is double that.

When Dimbleby suggested that migrants were needed to fill vital posts, the lady soon put him in his place by suggesting that with 60 million people we should be well able to fill all skill shortages.

Could it be that at last there is a groundswell of opinion amongst the general public that is prepared to make itself heard and to say that enough is enough?

Certainly in the East Kent Gazette recently the letters page was full of indignant correspondence from Sittingbourne residents complaining of the vast new housing schemes proposed for the area. However a connection between continual immigration and the need for all this additional housing is never made or never allowed to be made. A link however there surely is, as London's overspill pours into Kent.

Without the immigration there has been to these shores in the last 60 years the population of these islands would have started to plateau by now and then to gradually fall. I'm sure that most in England would consider that a blessing. We could actually start to demolish some of the monstrosities erected since the war and reclaim some of our allotment land and the school playing fields taken from our children. A proper mix of housing, light industry and open space is surely the path to sanity, but instead we are expected to live in small characterless dwellings on large soulless estates whilst the fine Victorian buildings constructed by our ancestors can only be gazed at from afar, occupied as they are now by those from other lands. This surely can't be right?

A 'danse macabre'

IT'S September and just a few years ago it was the month when gardeners were wary of seeing the first frosts. It won't happen tonight - today the temperature is 86 degrees Fahrenheit.

According to an article in The Observer we have just ten years in which to turn things around before global warming begins to accelerate apace.

Global warming has a vicious feedback effect: the more the planet warms, the more the ice melts and the sun's rays are absorbed into the dark ocean. The more the tundra thaws the more methane is released and the faster becomes the warming. What hope have we of reversing this trend when the same paper reports that attempts are being made to encourage the Japanese to fly half way around the world to visit Beatrix Potter's Cottage? It's as though lemming-like we rush headlong towards our own cliff edge.

James Lovelock believes it is no good us reaching for the low energy light bulbs when the rest of the world does nothing, but I don't agree with this view. I believe that if we made some dramatic moves it would make the rest of the world sit up and take note. Why not an environment tax on the airlines and use the money for solar panels on every roof? It should now be the government's aim for every dwelling to be carbon neutral and for every new car to be fitted with a hybrid engine.

Surely it is time for the Prime Minister to tear himself away from his sparring partner and address the nation on the seriousness of the situation; or will the government only become concerned when Africa starts to frizzle up and hordes of hungry Africans are clamouring at Europe's gate.

The world faces three great perils at the present time: global warming, peak oil and Islamic terrorism and the three are converging on us for a danse macabre. Only a future British National Party government will put the interests of our own indigenous peoples first.

RURAL ECONOMY: The industry's media now acknowledges that it is only the BNP that is prepared to take on issues affecting farming such as foreign imports, the supermarkets' monopoly and the European Union.

BNP 'clear and concise' on the problems facing farmers

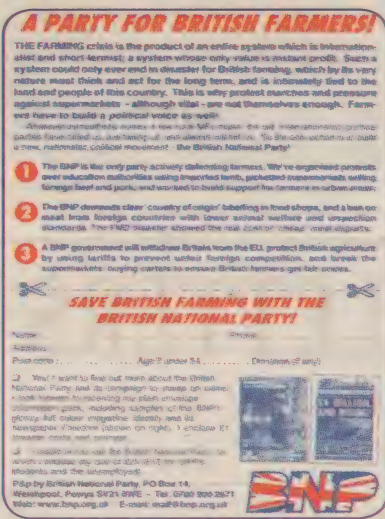

THE British National Party in its leaflet 'Who is destroying British farming', has provided the most clear and concise, high profile expression of the problems facing farmers in the UK.

That is the welcome endorsement of Peter Faulkner, the senior partner from the property firm Faulkners, writing in the Anglia Farmer magazine.

Addressing farmers, he went on:

"The leaflet targets cheap imports, supermarkets, free trade politicians, EU bureaucrats, big landowners and agro-chemical companies. Under the headline 'A Party for British Farmers' the BNP claims to be the only political party actively defending farmers.

"You may not have known this to be the case and only you can judge whether your MP or Euro MP are fighting your corner. At the end of 2005, we heard reports of multi-million pound bonuses being paid to the most successful city traders and in the service industries generally the financial rewards make farming profits look pathetic - particularly if you take into account your level of capital investment. The disparity of incomes is widening."

The British National Party has become the only choice for many farmers at election time because, as Peter Faulkner acknowledges, it is the only party that is prepared to take on the issues affecting farmers.

The organisations that currently represent farmers and landowners are reluctant to criticise the European Union, foreign imports, supermarket monopoly and the destruction of the rural economy because there is no lead from Labour or the Tories on the issues.

The National Farmers' Union and other farming groups seem so afraid of being out of step with today's politically correct agenda that they are unable to offer any real solutions to the problems currently facing the farming industry and the impact this is having on rural communities.

Thankfully the British National Party is now giving our countryside communities a real voice at the ballot box and it is heartening to see that this is now being acknowledged within the farming media.

No help for Yorkshire fishermen

by Louise Scott

FRENCH trawlers, illegally fishing inside a 12 mile exclusion zone off the East Yorkshire coast, have caused thousands of pounds worth of damage to the nets and lobster pots of local fishermen.

The French have not only been illegally fishing for whiting but also catching lobster and cod. All efforts to contact the rogue trawlers by radio failed, so the local fishermen asked for help from the Royal Navy fisheries protection ships, but this call also wasn't answered.

"The French trawlers are towing through our fishing gear, parting the lines and causing the loss of the lobster pots. At the moment, the total loss to the local fleet stands in excess of £40,000," said one Yorkshire fisherman.

The lack of action against the French vessels violating UK fishing waters gives the impression that fishing legislation is only strictly upheld when dealing with British boats.

Our Yorkshire fishermen need more patrols to prevent the rogue French vessels violating British fishing waters.

LOSS: French trawlers fishing illegally are severing lobster pot lines.

NEW BUILDS: Large scale developments prevent rainfall seeping through to the water table and lead to flooding.

Over-population fuels water crisis

BRTAIN is facing a major water crisis because unlimited immigration over the past ten years has led to a huge increase in consumption. As more and more people avail themselves of the water on tap, groundwater reserves are at their lowest level ever. This leads to low flows in many rivers which is having a serious effect on wild life and the character of our landscape.

Despite warnings from environmentalists the Government are pushing ahead with massive new housing developments in precisely the areas - the South Midlands, the East and South East of England - which are least able to cope with the extra demand for water because they have the lowest rainfall.

Bizarrely it will also be these areas which are left prone to flooding because large scale developments prevent rainfall seeping through to the water table and causes it to run straight off the land into the rivers which put homes at risk during heavy downfalls.

The BNP believes in renovating existing homes in already established communities rather than building new towns on green belt land

The British National Party would stop all immigration returning migrant workers and illegal immigrants to their own countries. The BNP believes in renovating existing homes in already established communities rather than building new towns on green belt land.

The British National Party would also bring water supplies back into the public domain because it is an essential service that shouldn't be in the hands of profit-making private companies. The high levels of leakage that still plague our water system is due to vital funds that should be tackling this problem ending up in shareholders' pockets.

Media bias helps keep us on our toes

OVER THE past month there appears to have been a joint Labour Party and media campaign against the British National Party here in Cumbria.

Week after week the Labour Party has been given access to television, radio and the newspapers to attack the BNP, while our press statements have been ignored or our comment not canvassed.

It all started with a BNP meeting in the West Cumbrian town of Maryport, which over the last two years has become a favoured destination of migrant workers from Poland.

Now this part of the county is Labour's heartland and within days of the meeting, Labour supporters, together with a local journalist, had visited every pub in the town warning them not to allow any more BNP meetings. The unfortunate landlord whose pub hosted the meeting was vilified in the local newspaper and forced to apologise to Maryport's Polish community.

Around the same time, the British National Party were being asked by residents in nearby Whitehaven to help their campaign to oppose plans for a £300,000 mosque and madrassa which Copeland Council are pushing ahead with.

Once again Labour Party supporters working within the county's media were given a free hand to attack the BNP over this issue as well, yet not once was the BNP given leave to respond.

Tony Cunningham, the Labour MP for Workington and Jamie Reed, the Labour MP for Copeland, were both allowed to make allegations against the British National Party that were not challenged or tempered in any way, just printed verbatim by journalists apparently eager to join this crusade against us.

The culmination of this campaign was an anti-BNP meeting in Maryport organised by one of Tony Cunningham's aides. The meeting was to rally support to stop the BNP taking its policies to the people of Maryport. In other words to deny local people a real choice at election time. Once again the meeting was reported on television and in the press without any critical comment whatsoever or any response from the BNP allowed.

Of course, it is depressing to still be on the end of such political bias within the media after the Party has made such great strides over the past five years. Depressing it may be, but it is also beneficial.

It is the soft option to use the media to promote your cause. In fact, for the Labour Party in Cumbria recently it has been all too easy and this could lead to disengagement. Sympathetic journalists become your public and the issues of real people become sidelined. For the British National Party on the other hand, with no access to the media, members and supporters have to pound the streets to get our message across.

While the two local Labour MPs were dictating their latest anti-BNP tirade to receptive journalists, a team of 17 BNP activists were out in Whitehaven, putting out a specially produced local leaflet calling on residents to make their voice heard on the question of the mosque.

While Tony Cunningham and his supporters were still basking in the media spotlight two weeks after their anti-BNP meeting had taken place, BNP activists were out in Maryport meeting people and distributing another special local leaflet called Poles Apart which warned that Labour policies are not in the best interests of the town.

In many parts of the country at the local elections next May it will be a straight fight between Labour and the BNP. As with any contest, much will depend on the fitness and morale of the contenders. Here in Cumbria at least, thanks in part to our local media's bias, I know which political party is going to be in better shape

Liars and rioters

THE other evening I sat back on my sofa, closed my eyes and listened to the BBC Six O'clock News.

After a brief resume of the day's headlines, the newscaster led with the main story.

"The admission by the Prime Minister that he lied to voters may have sparked the country's worst riots in decades, but the violent street protests have deeper-reaching economic and political roots. "Despite greater freedoms, many of its inhabitants feel they have been marginalised and left behind in a fast-changing nation as a small and powerful elite get richer at their expense."

Just for one fleeting moment there was a flickering hope that I might be listening to a British domestic story rather than the 'Hungarian stew' that had hit the headlines. But then I remembered that we British are reserved and notoriously tolerant and wouldn't dare to show such open emotion, preferring instead to just suffer in silence.

Our Prime Minister lied about the reasons for going to war with Iraq and now 119 young British soldiers have lost their lives because of those lies, and their families left to grieve their loss.

... and yet here there's not a rioter in sight.

Rory Allanson, London

Defend Gibraltar

I RECENTLY attended a family wedding in Gibraltar and witnessed first hand the unique culture of this tiny enclave on the Iberian Peninsula.

Many of today's inhabitants are direct descendants from when 'the rock' was taken in 1705, and they have a society which is British in every way. Spain has continuously demanded that Gibraltar be returned to Spanish rule after more than 300 years under the protection of the UK. This is against the wishes of the population which has voted overwhelmingly to continue its position as a British Colony and reject the overtures of Spain.

This Labour Government, backed by the Tories and Liberal Democrats, is seeking to hand Gibraltar over to Spain against the wishes of its people. The BNP must oppose this surrender of our territory and loyal subjects to a foreign power.

Adrian Marsden, Halifax.

Demographic change

THERE was a rather depressing prediction buried away in a recent joint statement from the CRE and CBI.

Jenny Watson, chair of the Equal Opportunities Commission, said the next generation of confident, ambitious young black and Asian women had a lot to contribute to the economy. But she went on:

"The bad news is that not enough employers are tapping into this pool of talent - despite demographic predictions that suggest women of Bangladeshi, Caribbean and Pakistani origin will make up, in some areas, a significant proportion of the workforce of the future."

It is these sorts of statements detailing the declining influence of White males within the economy that need to be publicised to shake the British people out of their complacency.

Mike Newton, Sutton.

Protect precious Devon

JUST back from taking the family on a camping holiday in Devon.

During the day we visited a host of attractions from steam railways to farms, from beautiful old preserved buildings such as Buckfastleigh Abbey to the rugged and bracing coastline.

The highlight of the holiday was the Dartmouth Regatta, the estuary full of yachts dominated by two Naval frigates and a firework spectacular. It was lovely to wander around the old town of Dartmouth just enjoying a part of Old England.

After arriving home I listened to BBC Radio 4 and was dismayed to hear Archdeacon of Barnstable David Gunn-Johnson, on Thought for the Day, speaking of the need to welcome more Muslims into Devon.

This would change Devon just like it has changed beyond recognition many areas in Yorkshire & Lancashire. Can these people see that it is its Christian tradition and truly English heritage that makes counties like Devon so precious to the British people.

Robert Walker, Huddersfield.

New immigration ploy

THE electorate should be aware of the latest ploy from this Government to prepare us for further large scale immigration from Third World countries - it's global warming.

The BBC has reported that diseases are spreading from tropical areas of the globe to Britain because of rising temperatures, and that we can expect people from these affected countries to migrate here.

The West of course is to blame for producing greenhouse gasses, yet there is no mention of other contributing factors such as emerging Asian economies, the felling of the world's forests, the corruption of African states, along with wars and the incompetence of Third World Governments.

Bernard Gudgeon, Reigate.

Cost of translation

QUESTIONING the politically-correct zealots that now control this country can damage your health.

After waiting three months for an appointment to see a specialist at the Royal Devon and Exeter Hospital, I was informed that it had been cancelled and my name struck off his list.

This is because, after reading the hospital's booklet 'Information for Outpatients', which devoted half a page to the provision of translators for ethnic minorities, I dared to write to the Chief Executive to question whether there was need for such a service and asked what the cost of it was to the NHS.

Welcome to Blair's Britain where lies the corpse of freedom of speech.

D. Melville BA(Hons), Newton Abbot.

Recommended reading

What an excellent publication Freedom is, and I wait expectantly each month for the latest issue to arrive - outlining, in an honest and straightforward way, the many problems facing our nation.

May I have the presumption to suggest a small addition to the newspaper. I would like to see a recommended reading section.

Three books I would like to suggest are Immigration by Moxon, London-istan by Melanie Phillips and Celsius 7/7 by Michael Grove.

There must be many others of a similar nature which would be of interest to your readership.

First BNP meeting in Whitehaven

WHITEHAVEN hosted its very first meeting of the British National Party last month when sixty members and supporters filled the lounge bar of a local pub.

The guest speaker was Martin Wingfield, editor of the BNP's newspaper Freedom.

He spoke on the damaging effect that the influx of migrant workers was having on Cumbria.

Paul Stafford, Cumbria BNP organiser, reported on leafleting in Carlisle, Maryport and Whitehaven and the progress of the campaign for the elections in May 2007 where the Party hopes to contest seats in Carlisle, Allerdale and Copeland.

Other speakers included a local resident who described himself as a former floating voter.

He said that he was concerned that no Copeland councillor was prepared to voice opposition to plans for a mosque in Whitehaven.

"This is the most emotive issue in many years and there is a huge swathe of opposition to it in the town, yet not one of our elected representatives is articulating the fears of those people who elected them."

"This is a scandal and it is why I responded to the BNP leaflet I received and why I am at this meeting tonight."

BNP meeting on the Isle of Man

THE British National Party's North-West regional organiser Roy Goodwin, visited the farthest corner of his patch last month when he hopped on a ferry to meet members on the Isle of Man.

The BNP official organised a day's leafleting before holding a meeting at an aptly named venue, the British Hotel in Douglas.

"It was a constructive meeting with twenty or so local members in attendance", Roy told Freedom.

"We discussed how the BNP could grow on the island and pencilled in some targets for the Manx Parliament elections."

"The Isle of Man is now beginning to experience some of the problems the mainland has been facing for the last five years and our local members report that the BNP is getting a much more favourable reception on the doorstep than it was 12 months ago."

Day of action in Haywards Heath

THE Crawley & Horsham Branch held a 'Day of Action' in the Tory stronghold of Haywards Heath on September 1st in order to hone their campaigning skills.

With 15 activists out on the streets of this quiet dormitory town in the heart of Sussex, considerable interest was generated and there was an overwhelmingly positive response from people on the streets.

While one group sold Freedom at the shopping parade in the main street, the others went off leafleting. Both groups were using the newly designed leaflet: The BNP Family Just Keeps Growing, which was very well received by members of the public.

"I agree with everything your saying", was the typical response when handed the leaflet.

In the afternoon, the whole group met up to leaflet a new development on the edge of the town, only this time they were accompanied in their leafleting by one of the branch's more musically inclined members, Mark Stevens and his squeeze box. He regaled us (and any interested passers-by) with a selection of traditional English folk songs, which certainly must be a first for any leafleting session!

The day was very productive with numerous enquiries and pledges to join the British National Party.

BNP take on New Labour in Maryport

THE British National Party in West Cumbria has responded to a bullying Labour Party campaign with a local leaflet that details how Labour Party policies are not in the best interests of local people.

The big issue in Maryport is the rapidly growing number of Polish workers who have come to the town to work in the fish processing factory. After 50 people attended a BNP meeting in a local pub to raise their concerns over this pressing issue, Labour Party supporters visited and intimidated the landlord forcing him to make a public apology to Maryport's Polish community for allowing the meeting to take place.

Then during the first week of September, a Labour Party rally was held in the town attended by local Labour MP Tony Cunningham, where speakers boasted about their campaign of intimidation - announcing that there now wasn't a venue in West Cumbria where the BNP could hold meetings. The rally also called for "the BNP to be run out of Maryport."

Cumbria BNP organiser Paul Stafford, dismissed the claims as "the usual Labour Party spin."

"We held a meeting in the centre of Workington just last month, and we have a campaign team in Maryport who are busy leafleting in preparation for next May's local elections."

To help with that campaign, Cumbria BNP has produced a local leaflet for Maryport entitled "Poles Apart", which explains why Labour's policies and the best interests of the people of Maryport are very different.

The leaflet details how it is the Labour Party, big employers and private landlords who benefit from economic migrants and how it's the local workforce, local families and local businesses which suffer because their jobs are taken, local accommodation is full and money earned in Maryport is sent back to Poland.

* At the beginning of September, 17 BNP members put out 2000 local leaflets in the West Cumbrian seaside port of Whitehaven. The leaflet detailed how Copeland Council was pushing ahead with a £300,000 mosque and madrasa for the town without consulting the people of Whitehaven as to whether they wanted one.

PAUL STAFFORD: Labour claims - just the usual spin.

Questions and answers in Walsall and Wolverhampton

by Rob Purcell

MORE than 100 BNP members packed into a meeting hall in Aldridge to hear an array of local speaking talent and a somewhat alternative talk by special guest Nick Griffin.

There were superb speeches from a number of local activists, including top notch deliveries from Walsall organiser Lisa Aspbury, and Steve Haddon of Wolverhampton, urging everyone to help prepare in both towns for next May's local elections. The BNP Chairman offered a different approach from his scheduled address by taking a questions and answers session in which he was asked all manner of questions from the audience and answered them in a way seldom seen in the Houses of Parliament - completely honestly!

BNP top online poll in Colchester

THE BRITISH National Party will receive a sizeable vote in Colchester in Essex at the next General Election if the results of an online poll prove correct.

The popular local website colchesterspirit.co.uk asked its visitors, "Who will you vote for at the next General Election?"

On the final day for casting the votes, the British National Party had received the most support with the parties stacking up as follows:

British National Party	27%
Conservatives	25%
Liberal Democrats	13%
Labour	8%
The Greens	2%
Won't Vote	18%
Undecided	7%

The poll also showed that the BNP is becoming accepted into the mainstream of British politics with 18% of voters indicating they wouldn't vote because all the parties are the same!!

GETTING IT DONE: A BNP clean-up team gets to work on clearing an M67 underpass at the request of residents of Commercial Street.

Residents praise BNP's 'action not words'

Working to overturn a 324 Labour majority

by Richard Chadfield

TAMESIDE organiser Nigel Byrne, is working hard in his ward of Hyde Newton where he took 25% of the vote on May 4th, almost ousting the sitting Labour councillor Margaret Oldham - the wife of the leader of the Labour group that runs the borough.

Nigel hopes to win the ward next May and thus become the first British National Party councillor in Greater Manchester. To make this goal a reality Nigel regularly walks his ward, chatting to residents and asking what problems they have.

One issue raised by residents near Commercial Street was the appalling mess in the nearby underpass beneath the M67 motorway. This was so bad that Nigel judged it to be not just an eyesore but a potential health hazard, posed by burnt out industrial size plastic wheelie bins.

Not deterred, Nigel and his team of helpers donned breathing masks and with shovels and brooms, proceeded to clean out the underpass for the local residents. On completion of the job BNP members chatted with the residents who repeatedly complained about the Labour council's attitude of indifference to their needs and the condition of their neighbourhood. They contrasted the Labour council's 'couldn't care less' attitude with the British National Party's readiness to get stuck in and actually get something done rather than just talking about it.

Crime & Antisocial Behaviour Are Out Of Control

Robberies are up, muggings and sexual assaults are up, burglary is up. A wave of anti-social behaviour is sweeping our streets and estates with a minority of rowdy youths making life unpleasant for the law abiding majority. But where are all the police? Set behind desks learning how to be politically correct!

When the police aren't in offices they're far too busy chasing drivers to collect a range of different fines and penalties to help fund the out of touch council. It seems that New Labour view the motorist as the only real threat to public safety!

But while the police are set at the side of the motorway or in political correctness classes the real criminals are free to wreck decent people's lives! The British National Party would put police back on the streets where they belong. Police would not be given their hands tied by politically correct hand cuffs and would be able to deal with criminals without fear of losing their jobs.

But Where Are All The Police?

The Cost of Europe

"Britain's membership of the EU costs the taxpayer £8.5 billion every year"

But the costs of membership are not just monetary...

- Jobs Thanks to the European Union, Britain's businesses are weighed down with bureaucracy and not destroying thousands of jobs.
- Sovereignty The EU is taking power away from Westminster and placing it in the hands of unelected bureaucrats.
- Currency Every member nation will be forced to join the Euro, that means no more pounds, and no more control over our economy.
- Fair Trials The British legal system rests on the rule of innocent until proven guilty. In Europe it's the other way round!

The NHS In Crisis

A £512 Million Deficit

Health Secretary Patricia Hewitt was forced to admit that the NHS deficit has reached £512 million - more than double the £200 million target.

15,000 NHS Jobs Face The Axe
In a desperate bid to cut costs in the face of the huge £512 million deficit, over 15,000 NHS jobs are to be axed. This means more understaffed hospitals.

1,000 NHS Beds To Go
More Labour cuts are on the way to reduce costs. A further 1,000 beds are to go this year alone.

FACT: There are more managers in the NHS than there are beds for patients.
FACT: The British National Party is the only party willing to cut costs by cutting bureaucracy and put patients first.

DOUBLE ACT: Frank Brammah and Colin Auty were guest speakers at Huddersfield in September.

Dutch auction raises £360 in Huddersfield

by Skye Turner

FRANK Brammah and Kirklees BNP councillor Colin Auty, were the guest speakers at last month's meeting of the Huddersfield group of the British National Party.

Frank, from Keighley, talked about the everyday problems facing his workforce from education to housing. He then went on to detail the amount of time his Member of Parliament and other MPs spend on foreign issues and debates rather than the concerns of their own constituents.

Colin Auty reported on his council work and how other councillors weren't interested in individual problems but preferred to concentrate on certain communities where the reward would be a block vote at elections.

The last speaker was Huddersfield's very own Barry Fowler, who spoke about British traditions and culture and how we should be continually talking and writing letters to the local press to gain support and candidates to fight the present council next May. Amongst the audience of over forty were former Mayor of Keighley Rose Thompson and Calderdale councillor Adrian Marsden. A Dutch style auction helped raise a collection of £360 towards local funds.

Voters desert the old gang in Blackburn

NICK HOLT: 9.4% in the former Tory stronghold of East Rural.

THERE was a stark warning for the old gang parties in the East Rural ward by-election for Blackburn & Darwen Council when the BNP candidate and two Independent candidates polled more votes than the three main parties put together.

Nick Holt for the BNP polled a creditable 9.4% in a contest won by an excellent Independent candidate who was the daughter of one of the ward's former councillors. The result was a shock for the Tories who saw a majority of 652 votes over-turned in one of their safest seats in the county.

A school closure halted and 18% polled in Gateshead campaign

THERE were two positive outcomes from the British National Party's campaign in the Dunston & Teams ward by-election for Gateshead Council where voting took place on Thursday 28th September.

BNP candidate Andy Swaddle, focused his campaign on saving Tyne View School from closure and to this end his appeal to Gateshead Council was successful when his 200-name petition and 100 personal letters forced an about-turn on shutting the school with the decision referred to the Department of Education adjudicator.

Thanks in part to his efforts on behalf of the local school but in the main to the most professional election campaign ever run in Gateshead, Andy managed to boost the BNP's poll share in the ward up six percentage points to 18%.

"It's a very good result for us," the North East's Regional Secretary Ken Booth told Freedom.

Teacher attacks arrogant, self-appointed busybodies

A smart suburban hotel provided the venue for a meeting on Tuesday 26th September of Burton's British National Party, which recently won 20% of the vote in the town's Shobnall Ward.

New Burton members and some invited guests enjoyed the spectacle of a function room proudly displaying the union flag and the banners of England, Wales and Scotland.

Local organiser Paul Carter, welcomed more than 60 invitees to hear an address by Derby teacher Clive Jones, who spoke of attempts by arrogant, self-appointed busybodies, to deprive him of his job and deny him the democratic right to stand as a candidate. Clive's determined refusal to be intimidated brought empathetic applause from the audience and inspired a number of members to offer themselves as potential candidates for the Party's local election campaign next May.

National Press Officer Dr. Phil Edwards, then spoke of his work countering smears and deliberate distortions of the truth directed against the Party by various hostile elements within the local and national media.

"We are not all equal under the law," he declared, "for we - the indigenous native folk of these islands - are now beginning to experience second class status, as the effects of massive uncontrolled immigration become horribly apparent in our towns and cities."

The meeting closed with a pledge by Paul Carter to launch a major leaflet campaign in Burton prior to canvassing those wards where the British National Party can expect to make a real challenge to the failed policies of the discredited Lib/Lab/Con alliance.

A collection of £250 was raised to provide the necessary resources to support volunteer teams now ready to become active in spreading the nationalist message to the voters of Burton. The message is simple: if you want more of the same, keep voting the same. If you want change, then change the way you vote!

BURTON MEETING: A specially invited audience of sixty contributed to a collection of £250 towards next year's local elections.

Rochdale hosts two BNP meetings in a week

ROCHDALE BNP held two meetings within the space of a week in September.

The first one was held in Rochdale where the guest speaker was Arthur Kemp, who spoke about his new book The March of the Titans.

The fifty plus attendance also heard from Rochdale organiser Kevin Bryan, and chairman of the meeting Mathew Hamill.

Six days later another meeting was held, this time in Waterfoot in Rossendale. The guest speaker on this occasion was Burnley BNP councillor Len Starr.

This was only the 2nd meeting that has been held in the Rossendale area so the attendance of 30 locals was very encouraging especially as Rochdale organiser Kevin Bryan, was fighting a by-election in Rossendale so the timing of the meeting fitted in perfectly for drumming up support.

Promising first poll

THERE was a promising first effort for Kevin Bryan when he contested Cribden Ward for Rossendale council on 28th September.

To poll over 9% was certainly encouraging and with more work in the ward in the coming months the vote will be even better in May.
